Comments

[Claims 1 – 10]

Cited Example 1 describes traffic control based on the priority level after determining a priority level for a packet based on the port number that is set in the TCP/UDP packet as the method for controlling traffic between networks in a router. In addition, performing scheduling and polling in order to control traffic is well known in the industry.

Cited Example 2 describes determining the type of protocol from the destination IP address and port number of the packet, and selecting the appropriate route according to the characteristics of said protocol. (In particular, see Claim 2 and paragraph [0010].)

Consequently, an individual in the industry could easily arrive at applying Cited Example 2 to Cited Example 1 in order to determine the priority level from the IP address and from the port number and creating a structure that controls the traffic based on the priority level, thereby creating the structures according to Claims 1 through 10 of the present application.
